

THE FANDOM

COVER STORY

The Fandom dives down to the bottom of the "lost episodes" of pop culture and how they would evolve to the analog of the future.

Cover Image: Suicide Mouse

TAPES, GLITCHES, TWISTED MINDS

What? Did you really expected that I would tell you a horror story about a faulty video with a lot of glitches with this retro typewriter font from the 1950s? You're really funny, did you know that? Jokes aside, we're here for guide you all in the tour of the bizarre, mind bending, scary world of the lost episode creepypastas. "Bro, Halloween were TWO months ago, why you're doing a scary issue on 2 days before the end of the year?" you might ask. Well, these don't stop popping up regardless of which day are we in, even there's some scary Santas in some pieces of analog horror too, which we'll get into later. So, kick back, relax, and let yourself enjoy the ride with us, blending the spookiness of the Halloween and joy of the New Year.

-Random the Random Fox

THE SPOOK: BEHIND THE MAGIC

RTRF:So, first things first, we have to understand what makes the lost episode creepypastas makes spookily magical. In order to do that, let's examine a lost episode into it's bones. For this, we have Sam Francesca, the professional spook observer. So Mr. Francesca, how do you describe a normal lost episode creepypasta from the start to finish?

SF:Good question, Mr. Fox. A normal lost episode creepypasta starts with the narrator of the story encountering to the episode, the detailed description of it, and the aftermath of it.

RTRF:Good viewpoint you've got here. And, the traits are like "statics/glitches","VHS aesthetics","innocent characters having bloodshot eyes","psychopath/sociopath employee making this video out of pity/ or get revenge in a sick way", the list goes on.

SF:It sure does.

FILE

HIGH PRIORITY ALERT

FICTIONAL EMERGENCY ALERT SYSTEM SCENARIOS

EMERGENCY
BROADCAST
BBC

WARNING

PAY CLOSE ATTENTION

Before we're getting into analog horror, we would like to mention the subgenre of the fictional emergency alert system scenarios, or FEASS for short. Basically, it has been considered as a ring of the "works of fictional horror using technologic devices" chain. In the next paragraph, you'll see types of FEASS and analog horror together. Please keep in mind that all of the FEASS and analog horror are FICTIONAL

THE TYPES

Alternative History: Though all of them are related to alternative history, FEASS stories are the ones that provides the most critical info about the era they have been made.

Supernatural: Ghosts, rogue-going moons, aliens, you name it. Every lifeform are invading the Earth.